INFORMATION FOR AUTHORS

he Journal of Experimental Social Psychology is devoted to the publication of research theory on social interaction and related phenomena, including social motivation, social nition, attitude and belief processes, and intergroup and intragroup processes. The rnal does not undertake to specify rigidly an appropriate domain of content, but seeks eflect current significant research and theory relevant to the interests of experimental ial psychologists. It is anticipated that most manuscripts accepted will report results experimental, conceptually based research that advances specific social psychological orizing. However, other types of papers, such as theoretical analyses, literature reviews, l methodological notes, are also encouraged to the extent that these papers contribute nificantly to an understanding of social phenomena. It is expected that all empirical earch submitted for consideration will have been conducted in a manner consistent with American Psychological Association's Ethical Principles in the Conduct of Research h Human Participants (1973).

Original papers only will be considered. Manuscripts are accepted for review with the derstanding that the same work has not been and will not be nor is presently submitted ewhere, and that its submission for publication has been approved by all of the authors d by the institution where the work was carried out; further, that any person cited as source of personal communications has approved such citation. Written authorization y be required at the Editor's discretion. Articles and any other material published in Journal of Experimental Social Psychology represent the opinions of the author(s) and ould not be construed to reflect the opinions of the Editor(s) and the Publisher.

Authors submitting a manuscript do so on the understanding that if it is accepted for blication, copyright of the article, including the right to reproduce the article in all forms d media, shall be assigned exclusively to the Publisher.
